Danielle Willis named to key post for Euclid Corridor Project

CLEVELAND -- Danielle Willis, 34, of Westlake, has been named Project Officer of the Euclid Corridor Transportation Project, a major capital improvement now being designed by the Greater Cleveland Regional Transit Authority (RTA).

In her position, Willis reports to Project Manager Dennis Albrecht. She serves as a liaison between RTA and Whelan Communications, the public involvement consultant for the Project. She will also oversee other aspects of public involvement and public art, provide overall project support and community relations, and serve as a liaison with stakeholders and community groups.

Willis has a bachelor's degree in journalism and public relations from the University of Detroit.

For more than eight years, she has been a planner in the areas of transportation, and community and economic development. For the past two years, she has served as a Planning Team Leader with RTA. She has also worked for several non-profit and for-profit organizations, where she was directly responsible for public affairs, resource development, and facilitating design and construction for community-related projects.

To reach Willis, call 216-771-4144, or send e-mail to dwillis@gcrta.org.
